

Poetry.

THE MARTYRS OF THE SOUTH.

BY A. B. MEEK.

Oh, weep not for the gallant hearts
Who fell in battle's day;
They well performed their hero parts
And passed from earth away.
They lie asleep on honor's bed—
Young Freedom's martyred band—
And all that's dear to man they bled—
For God and native land.

Weep not for Jackson, who laid down
His life in fullest fame;
Who always wore the victor's crown,
Now wears a deathless name!
Oh! what a loss that day was ours,
When that great light grew dim;
We weep among our darkened bowers,
But do not weep for him.

But Sidney Johnston—whose high worth
Was Freedom's polar star—
Who like Elijah, passed from earth,
In battle's fiery car—
Shed not a tear—he is not dead—
But up from Shiloh goes!
Where wreaths ambrosial deck his head,
Beside great Washington!

Weep not for Garnett, his young brow
Among the earliest pale;
Though death compelled his form to bow,
His spirit never quailed!
Among Virginia's mountain heights,
With Garfield by his side,
He fought for Southern rights
And for their country died.

But for McCullough, do not weep—
The Marion of the West—
Who for Bartow, nor Bee—but keep
Their memories in the breast.
They realized man's noblest fate—
In victory's lap to lie—
We all must die, or soon or late—
How blest like them to die!

Oh Mississippi's stalwart chief—
Brave Barlowdale, too, has gone,
And Calhoun's life too brief,
And Gwin—and brave Mouton.
Kentucky's Hanson slumbers low
With Helm and Branch as well;
Weep not for them the stream of woe,
With angels now they dwell!

For Alabama's own loved dead,
Though humber be their names,
Why should the selfish tear be shed?
They are now God's and fame's.
Reckless, Webb, Jones, Hobbs and Hale,
Best Jewell, Somers, Moore,
Age, Garrett, Lomax, Pelham, Baine,
On death's triumphant shore.

What stars crowd out upon the sky
Of history, as I write!
Would I could number them on high,
The planets of our night!
They are immortal; and for them
We need not shed a tear;
They wear a golden diadem
From distant spheres!

But we must weep—aye deeply mourn
For our own living bereft,
The prisoners from our altars torn,
Our homes in darkness left.
The widowed and the orphan band
On life's rude waters tost—
Weep for the anguish-stricken land
That such great souls has lost!
